"I suppose! can say that I first became interested in Scouting away back in 1888, when I was soldiering out in Zululand. I learned then how to keep my eyes about me and to learn from what I saw. Later on, still in South Africa, I was in the company of the celebrated American Scout, Burnham. He was better than I was at spotting tracks and marks, but I think I was better at deducing what they meant, and he used to call me Sherlock after Conan Doyle's

Development of Character

"Then when I was serving with the Thirteenth -Hussars I realized that the training of the men was not sufficiently individual and practical, so I put my methods into practice with my squadron. Then when I com-manded the Fifth Dragoon Guards I carried on a similar training, but improved so as to develop character— manliness, self-reliance and relia-bility—in conjunction with military efficiency. "During the South African war in 1899-1900 the boys in Mafeking were organized as a general utility corps on what are now Scout lines, and the result was very successful. When the South African Constabulary were organized, the same ideas were em-ployed; emulation between the pa-

AMSTERDAM - Europe's reaction to America's proposed higher tariff is a secret combine of "irregulars" in the International Chamber of Commerce to effect reprisals. Just what form action is to be taken it is impossible now to say, but it is reliably stated that the anti-American move-ment is powerful, and that more will be heard of it after the Finance Com-

Anti-American, or any other antinational movement, of course, is not sanctioned by the International Chamber, which is purely a non-political body engaged for the past nine years in a successful effort to "improve the world mechanism for exchange of goods and to remove as exchange of goods and to remove as far as possible the economic causes of international conflict."

Pot and Kettle Argument

The new disclosure, therefore, casts a shadow over the present session of the "commercial equality and trade barriers" section. Whether the International Chamber will Ignore the issue or force it into the open the issue of force into open before adjournment at the end of the week is wholly problematical. The Chamber's present membership comprises 300,331 big business men from 45 countries, a fair proportion of whom are European. The work of training volunteer leaders has made marked progress already in the number of volunteer leaders enrolled throughout the United States. Figures from the sta-tistical department of the Boy Scouts of America show that where last year there were 193,350 volunteer leaders, there are at present 224,122 enrolled. The increase of volunteer leaders, says Scout officials, is rapidly making it possible to put every section of the United States under Scout Council sponsorship, and is making the expansion of the Scout movement into the rural field possi-

Elizabeth, Countess of Carnarvon, was one of the greatest factors that contributed to the realization of this. Mohmed Konitza was chosen Chief Scout of Albania, and this of course knowsh about unificathis, of course, brought about unifica-tion, which was strengthened by the fact that His Majesty the King be-came the patron of the Boy Scouts organization. Thus at the present there is the national headquarters, whose duty is to see for the ad-vancement of Scouting in every corner of the Kingdom.

There has been no literature in Albania concerning Scouting, so there could be no trained group of people who could organize Scout troops in the real sense of the word. There is one translation on Scouting, only one translation on Scotting, more or less leading with fundamentals. However, it is hoped to ameliorate the situation by bringing into light the "Rules and Regulations" and the "First Steps in Scotting," which will be helpful to both Scout masters and boys. The present number of registered Scouts is about 400, the majority working for the second class tests.

The mountains are near by. Therefore most Icelandic Scouts spend their week ends camping. They travel mostly by bicycies, in motorcars, or afoot. The Scouts use Sir Robert Baden-Powell's! "Scouting for Boys" as their manual of instruction. Fortunately the movement received the assistance of the Ministry of Education and the various schools gave it special encouragement. Ahmad Amin started a training class and prepared a substantial number of scoutmasters. In 1925 the Scouts gave a praiseworthy demon-stration before the Government dignitaries and the then Minister of Education, Nassir Eddevleh, pre-sented medals. The replies brought 1000 letters with $2000: This was the nucleus of what has cost as a completed building $1,-650,000. But that $2000 was sufficient encouragement. A board of directors was elected, with Mrs. A. Barton Hepburn of Kappa Kappa Gamma as president, and Alice Duer Miller as chairman of the women's advisory committee. Mrs. Hepburn became and has remained the active and respon e executive for the enterprise. No her painstaking care. She saw the splendid potentialities of the idea, and purposed to make the Panhel-lenic Hotel a home where members and their friends might find not only shelter and comfort, but congenial, friendly companionship, the encourfriendly companionship, the encouragement of the warm handclasp. Nothing, however, was done for the girls until 1905, when the Ministry of Education invited Frau Sprung to take up the question. She went on lecture tours in the provinces, interviewing mayors of towns and members of Parliament. She endeavored to interest them by explaining the necessity for giving girls good trade and domestic training.

Centers for Training

The first step taken in organizing mestic training was to form centers for the training of teachers. "Teachers from Germany or Swit-rland," Frau Sprung explained, 'could not be taken to Austrian schools because people did not like their way of cooking, and Austrian cooks could not teach. The first school for teachers of domestic science was formed in 1906 in school for teachers of domestic science was formed in 1906 in Vienna, one in Innsbruck and one in Prod. The science was formed in 1906 in 1906 in the science was formed in 1906 in Bad Ischl. After this we formed schools for girls of 16, for the education of housewives and the daughters of innkeepers, which give a one year's course of instruction partly practical and partly theoretin 1918.

Another set of schools was established to provide a course of one year's training for girls that had left the elementary schools at the age of 14, the daughters of laborers miners, and employees at steel works. Such girls could not be taught at a later age as they had to earn their living. These girls are trained in the elementary work of a laborer's household and go into do-mestic service. Others become seam-stresses, but the training in either case has prepared them to manage their own households in the future. The girls attend the schools from 8 The girls attend the schools from 8 gestions in the way of color or ara. m. to 5 p. m. and are taught simple rangement, but leaves the problem sewing and dressmaking as well as housewifery. They like to wear the national dress, in which they look remarkably neat. A great point is made of their personal cleanliness. "All these schools," Frau Sprung "are in the mountainous districts. As far as I know there are none in Vienna, as the Viennese do not want their girls to go into service; they prefer them to be seam-stresses, shop girls or typists."

A third type of school for girls coming from the elementary or the lower classes of the high schools gives a domestic training and a good general education. These girls are intended

He was John Skelton, poet, parson at last from a far height the gallant and to image the great unseen be- and observer of men, and Colin Clout of the Sixteenth Century." Henry VII took him away from his parsonage to impart some of his wit and learning to his royal son. For this he was rewarded by his pupil, "Bluff King Hal," with the post of court poet, from which giddy height he satirized the world about him. Never were there so many abuses; seldom was there such plain speaking! Too plain for some, but "Colin Clout" never lacked anything in cour-

"He prates and he patters He chides and he chatters He is but a fool, Let him go to school On a three-foot stool

That he may down sit, For he lacketh wit."

In the end brave Colin Clout got into trouble through his lively pen, and fled for succor to his good friend, Islip of Westminster, whose punning devices on his name still decorate devices on his name still the Abbey. But this was what Mr. Smith and his willing colleagues in the experiment believed six years ago—that it would be possible to apply to the teaching of music those sound fundamentals underlying classroom methods, and that they would apply in music as they do in geography, arithmetic and history. The aid of friendly rivalry, competition and the encouragement that emanates from a group all bent on the same objective could then be taken advantage of.

Mr. Smuth continued. "If at the end of two years, it is demonstrated that he has talent, he can then transfer to a private teacher if he is financially able, and if he is not, he will have actual data to present to some benevolent person who may be persuaded to help him. The remaining lesson hours are filled with ordinary class-instruction, Mr. Vrij holds the opinion, that this 'cautious application of the Dalton plan" develops more self-reliance in children, teaching them to make the best possible use of their time, and preparing them well for later un-aided study. Last, but not least, the individual is equipped with better general knowledge; he learns to dare to do things by himself, at his own instance, he learns to put his shoulder to the wheel.

And what of the bright pupil, who has finished his or her task, within the appointed time? Well, he or she may use it in the way he or she thinks best: reading a book, or studying. A fine opportunity for improving the education by self-tuition. It has been proved, that pupils make good use of their leisure hours.

One of the progressive methods employed by the New School Society is the application of manuscriptwriting. This is taught during the first three years. In the fourth class this is changed into the old way of "sloping" writing. And thanks to the thorough training by previous manuscript-writing, this change can be accomplished within two and a half months. This is done to avoid dif-ficulties for the pupils, when later they enter high schools where scriptwriting is not yet permitted

23-The Adjustment Letter

Probably no other letter can do so much good-or so much harm-as the adjustment letter. Adjustment letters open a channel through which customers may be bound closer to the houses with which they deal. Everyone is familiar with the old proverb-"A friend in need is a friend indeed." When a customer has a grievance, he is a friend in need, and the house that makes an adjustment removing that grievance is a friend indeed. Friends in need are usually lasting ones.

The-job of the adjustment letter is to-Settle the difficulty

Keep the customer

The following outline in writing adjustment letters will be found safe and productive.

1—Express courtesy in the opening paragraph by thanking the customer for telling you of the difficulty or by agreeing with him in his contention

2-Tell what your firm is going to do about the claim.

3-Explain why the action is being taken. (Often it has proved wise to tell how the error occurred.)

4-Close with an expression of the firm's desire to co-operate in every way possible.

Note how these four factors are combined in the following letter:

Thank you for calling our attention to the shortage in the bolt of cartridge silk. We regret that there was any deficiency. Because we have no more of this material, we enclose our check for $7.25 to pay for the 10 yards in question.

Although we use what appears to us every possible precaution in order to have measurements correct, it seems that a mistake creeps in now and then. But—you may be sure that we shall do everything we can to fill your future orders satisfactorily.

The opportunity to make things right for you is appreciated.

ENDICOTT JOHNSON CORP. ENDICOTT JOHNSON CORP.
BINGHAMTON—Endicott Johnson Corporation has reduced its stock of finished shoes from $12,000,000 as of Jan. 1 to $7,000,000 July 1, in accordance with the new policy of having smaller inventories. Further reduction to $6,000,000 or less is planned as soon as possible. Heavier volume of sales and shipments has resulted in increased activity, with several shoe factories and tanneries now operating full time.

Are You "Out of the Market"?

Why?

Ask any brokerage firm and you will hear that many of their customers are "out of the market". Various reasons are given. Stocks are too high; the "market never does anything" in the summer, and so on.

Your real investor, however, the man who successfully keeps his capital working for him, is never out of the market in the sense that he has sold all his securities.

Don't let your capital remain idle

Possibly this is a bad time for trading profits. We are not concerned about that. But it most certainly is a good time to secure sound, unbiased investment counsel. Simply because this may be a period when all-or the majorityof stocks will not move rapidly ahead is no reason for allowing your capital to remain idle. Money should be used to make money. And, it is Brookmire's business to aid the investor in accomplishing this.

The work we do for investors A 25 year record of successful ex-perience, a council of trained econ-omists, and the most thorough-going and comprehensive research are at your disposal. Send the coupon for a description of Brook-mire Service and the work it is doing for investors.

Coupen Debentures in $1,000 denomination registerable as to principal. The Indenture will contain provisions permitting certain modifications with the assent of the holders of not less than 85% in aggregate principal amount of the outstanding Debentures. Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, Trustee.

The Company will agree in the Indenture to make available semi-annually beginning December 1, 1930 funds sufficient to retire 1% of these Debentures at the time outstanding if obtainable during specified periods by purchase at or below 100 and accrued interest.

TAX PROVISIONS: The Company will agree to pay interest without deduction for any Federal income tax not in excess of 2% per annum, and to refund Pennsylvania 4 mills tax, Maryland 4½ mills tax, Connecticut 4 mills tax, California 5 mills tax, and Massachusetts income tax not exceeding 6% per annum, upon application as provided in the Indenture.

For further information regarding the Company and these Debentures, atttention is called to the letter of Mr. Henry L. Doherty, President of the Company, copies of which will be furnished on request and from which it will be noted among

Company: Cities Service Power & Light Company, a subsidiary of Cities Service Company, controls through stock ownership companies rendering electric light and power, gas and/or transportation service in seventeen states, serving territories having a population estimated to be in excess of 2,200,000. Its operating subsidiaries render public utility service to over 425,000 customers in more than 600 communities, including such important cities as Toledo, Lorain, Mansfield, Warren and Sandusky, Ohio; Denver and Boulder, Colorado; St. Joseph and Joplin, Missouri; Knoxville, Tennessee; and Durham, North

Business: The size and character of the properties now controlled are indicated by the following table:

Earnings: For the twelve months ended December 31, 1928, as shown in the above mentioned letter, consolidated net earnings of the Company and subsidiaries, irrespective of the date of acquisition, before renewal and replacement reserves, amortization and dividends, were $21,982,513 or over 1.8 times the combined total of the annual interest on the $65,000,000 of Debentures of the Company and the annual interest and dividends on the $141,801,040 of funded debt and preferred stocks of subsidiaries (preferred stocks stated at par or, if without par value, at involuntary liquidation value), to be outstanding upon completion of this financing; and after such reserves this ratio was over 1.6. The balance of such consolidated net earnings after deducting such annual interest and dividend charges of subsidiaries but before reserves for renewals and replacements was 3.8 times the annual interest on $65,000,000 of 51/2% Debentures.

Over 93% of the consolidated gross operating revenue of the subsidiaries for the twelve months ended December 31, 1929, was derived from electric and gas service.

Purpose of Issue: Over $15,000,000 of the proceeds from the sale of these Debentures will be used to provide funds, or to reimburse the Company, for the acquisition or retirement of funded debt or preferred stocks of subsidiaries outstanding on December 31, 1928, and to retire short term indebtedness of the Company.

Equity: Junior to these Debentures will be 185,000 shares of preferred stocks without par value and $65,000,000 par value of common stock of the Company. Dividends have been regularly paid on both the preferred and common stocks since the organization of the Company in 1924, the present dividend rate on the common stock being 8% per annum.

Ownership: Cities Service Company owns directly, or through a wholly owned subsidiary, all of the common stock (except Directors' qualifying shares) of Cities Service Power & Light Company. The oustanding debentures, preferred and common stocks of Cities Service Company, which also owns subsidiaries operating oil and natural gas and other properties, had, based on July 1, 1929 quotations, an aggregate market value of over $900,000,000.

We Recommend These Debentures for Investment

Price 93 and Interest; to Yield About 61/8%

These Debentures are offered for delivery when, as and if issued and received by us, and subject to approval of counsel. It is expected that Temporary Debentures will be available for delivery on or about July 24, 1929.

while the steamer is due at New York July 22, the plane is to be cata-pulted on the afternoon of July 21, with mails, to be landed at Boston that night. Arrangements are being made for the use of a seaplane float in Boston harbor and a speedboat to rush the mail direct to shore for transmittal to the main post office.

In event that the Bremen should

With other capitalists he organized the mighty Canadian Pacific Line; his own railroad sys-tem connected at Duluth with steamships operated upon the Great Lakes, at the Pacific coast with ships which were run to Japanese and Chinese ports.

Mr. Hill's vision of the economic future of his country was based on actualities. For he had himself lived in pioneer settlements and knew the character and needs of the settlers. It was his ideal to see every western state dotted over with farmsteads, to see lands tilled, crops and liveto see lands tilled, crops and live-stock improved and markets de-veloped. This result could be achieved only with railroads, which put the most remote farm into touch with the great eastern or western ports. Thus the Northwest was con-quered by railroad tracks. Mr. Hill-devoted much attention to the wel-fare of those communities which fare of those communities which bordered upon his lines. He was a man of varied sympathies, a man widely respected, deservedly re-garded as one of the peers of the great industrial age in America.

The Visible Hand From Moscow

TO THE handful of Communists in the United States, Jay Lovestone may be the "American Stalin"; but to the officials of the Third Internationale, Mr. Lovestone is very much a 'Russian Trotzky." And herein lies a story which discloses with unusual clarity that the 4500 miles which separate Moscow and New York are no barrier to the iron hand of dictatorship which the Communist Internationale in Russia exerts over the Communist Party in the United States.

On the authority of the New York Times, it appears that a group of leading American Communists, including Mr. Lovestone, Ben Gitlow, Communist candidate for Vice-President of the United States in the last election, Bertram D. Wolfe and others, has been detained in Moscow at the direction of the Communist leaders. These Americans were "invited" to Moscow following the recent outbreak of dissension in the American Communist ranks, and while as citizens of the United States they may demand their "release," such action on their part would mean their immediate expulsion from the Communist

The next chapter in this story, as recounted in the Times, records that Mr. Lovestone, until recently the dominant leader among Communists in the United States, has escaped from Russia and has returned to New York in an effort to re-establish his position of leadership, against the wishes of Moscow. Under cabled instructions from the Third Internationale to the Central Committee of the Communist Party in the United States, Mr. Lovestone has received a Trotzkian expulsion from the party.

Another interesting incident to which the Times calls attention concerns the annual American Communist convention, which was held in New York last March. At this convention Mr. Lovestone was reported to have had in its early deliberations a majority of 100 to 1 in support of his leadership, but acting upon cabled orders from Moscow the delegates subsequently voted Mr. Lovestone out of power and named William Z. Foster, the recent Communist candidate for President of the United States, in

Communism in the United States is a negligible and waning movement, as much opposed by American labor as it is by American capital. In the last presidential election the Communist ticket of Foster and Gitlow received less than 50,000 of the nearly 40,000,000 votes that were cast. These recent instances, then, of Moscow's dictation of Communist Party politics in the United States, far from being any cause of alarm, should be read wholly as illuminating the philosophy of world revolution which the Third Internationale is apparently still seeking to bring

These efforts do not indeed represent the xpressed will of the masses of Russia, and this point should be appreciated. Such events can scarcely fail, however, to place the Soviet Government in a most unfavorable light. Recalling the circumstances which prompted Great Britain to sever diplomatic relations with Russia in 1927, Arthur Henderson, the new Labor Foreign Minister, cannot be accused of overcaution in his declaration that Britain's resumption of relations with Russia must be preceded by Moscow's pledge that Communist propaganda in the British Empire cease. Until the Soviet Government takes active and effective steps to dissociate itself from such propaganda and to keep the Third Internationale from the back yards of other countries, it is difficult to see how Russia can fully establish itself within the family of nations.

Il Duce's Yacht and Posterity

T IS not in the least surprising to find Benito Mussolini, whose admiration for Roman emperors has found expression in the zeal with which he is pursuing the task of salvaging the ancient galleys in Lake Nemi, the prospective possessor of a vacht of matchless beauty and comfort. For his private use the Aurora is being reconditioned at a cost of 15,000,000 lire, and when the vessel is complete it will be in a style befitting the high rank which the Duce has attained in the political world. Treasures of art will adorn its cabins, and modern appliances will keep the Italian Premier in close touch with affairs in Rome in general, and with that part of his Cabinet which does not reside in his own person in particular.

Strange it is that at the time when Signor Mussolini, a rigid economist, is plunging into a tiny sea of luxury, President Hoover, no less an economist, is abandoning the use of a yacht which has been the pride of presidents, on the. ground of unnecessary expenditure, and substituting for the expensive Mayflower a forty-foot barge which requires but a crew of five. Political economy apparently operates in diverse

But apart from the economic phase of the juestion there is a historic interest in the buildng of a palatial yacht. Some besides the studious probably have thumbed the pages of Roman history in recent days, impelled only by the desire to know something of an emperor who, 1900 years ago, lavished wealth upon ancient galleys. And it is barely possible that posterity may look to the luxurious vacht of today to shed some light on one of the most famed dictators who ever walked the streets of Rome. Il Duce's tenure of office is no mere passing phase in Italian history, and the yacht which will soon be placed at his disposal is hardly likely to go the way of that of an eminent financier on the other side of the Atlantic and ply as a ferryboat between two Canadian ports.

Britain Will Investigate 'the Trade'

MOWARD the end of the King's speech from the throne, unemphasized in any way in most of the newspapers, appears this simple statement of an almost revolutionary purpose:

My ministers decided that the time has come to investigate the whole field of legislation relating to sale and supply of intoxicating liquor, and on their recommenda-tion I propose to appoint at an early date commissioners for this purpose.

Hitherto the liquor interests, or, as they are termed in England, "the trade," have been able to avert any such detailed and scientific inquiry into the methods, extent and result of the sale of intoxicating liquor in Great Britain. The political power of those interested, from the great beer and whisky members of the House of Lords down to the holder of a license for a public house, has been so great that politicians have avoided anything likely to give offense. The wide distribution of stock in the great breweries and distilleries, much of it held as part of the endowment funds of churches and educational institutions, has tended to give not merely a financial interest in sections of society which ordinarily would be looked upon as hostile to the liquor-selling business, but has indeed had the tendency to make that business respectable. The great strength of the movement against liquor in the United States, even in the present insufficient state of enforcement of the prohibition law, is that the business of making and selling alcoholic liquors has been definitely outlawed, and its representatives made disreputable. If high financial profits attend the violation of the law now, as they attended the prosecution of this business when it was lawful, personal ostracism has always been visited upon saloon keepers and their associates.

In dealing politically with the liquor evil, England has to a great extent to overcome the quasirespectability of the trade. Of course, there, as in the United States, the absurdity is presented of a greater degree of obloquy being attached to the man who pursues it in a small way than to the great distiller or brewer. But such an investigation as is promised in the King's speech cannot fail to elicit facts showing the economic and moral menace of the trade, and to fix responsibility upon manufacturer and small retailer alike. It is unlikely that out of the investigation will come any movement for immediate prohibition. British political sentiment is still far behind on that subject. But out of the report of the commission may come some plan for the more drastic regulation of sales than at present, as a first step toward materially reducing the liquor evil. At any rate, it is a cheering sign to find this undertaking adopted as part of the specific program of the party in power. The foes of the liquor traffic have always and in every country urged inquiries of this sort, knowing that the results invariably tend to still further curb the use of alcoholic beverages.

Freedom of Debate in Congress

"TOR any speech or debate in either house I they shall not be questioned in any other place." With this language the Constitution of the United States guarantees to senators and representatives freedom from criminal or civil liability for any statements that they may make in Congress. Freedom from political liability is not enjoyed. A congressman's constituents may dislike a speech that he makes and decide to retire him to private life. But a congressman's remarks on the floor cannot give rise to an action for civil, or to a prosecution for criminal libel.

Senator Hiram Bingham desires a change in the law. He has announced that he will introduce an amendment to the Constitution to this effect. "I see no reason," he declares, "why a senator or congressman should be permitted to criticize a citizen of high or low degree without being held responsible and made liable for whatever statements he may make." The chances of such a resolution even being considered are extremely remote. Grave injustices are on occasion done citizens and government officials by remarks carelessly and inaccurately made on the floor of Congress. Such occasional injustices are the price that must be paid by innocent individuals for the advantages which come from complete freedom of public discussion in Congress.

One of the most valued rights which the British House of Commons strove for centuries to obtain from the Crown was that the King should not attempt to punish members for expressing their opinions or voicing the grievances of their constituents. All of the post-war constitutions adopted in Europe explicitly guarantee to members of the legislature freedom from prosecution and libel suits because of what they may say in debates.

What "debate" is, however, has not been decided by the courts in America. Under "leave to print," representatives "extend their remarks." They publish in the Congressional Record speeches delivered outside of Congress and other materials. Does "speech or debate in either house" include only words actually spoken? Or does the language cover anything put in the Record? Some day the courts may have to pass on this point. If they should decide that the words must be spoken, they might thereby assist in persuading Congress to revise its rules and make the Congressional Record a record of actual debate and nothing more.

On Collecting Covered Bridges

ART MUSEUMS in the larger cities of the United States, which had their beginnings in small collections of paintings and sculpture, have entered many new fields in recent years. Specimens of sections of transported castles, the finish and furnishings of rooms of bygone periods and various other bulky antiques have been transferred to American museums with apparently little or no concern as to the magnitude of the task. If the field of collections is further widened, the time may come when many museums will find it necessary to dissolve themselves into their integral parts and establish specialized museums under entirely separate roofs.

While there are a few American museums which specialize on particular objects, it is not usual to find one group devoted exclusively to paintings, another to sculpture and others to whatever by-product of the original art museum it has been desired to conserve and exhibit. Whether old bicycles, automobiles, schoolhouses, lawn mowers, lighthouses or steam engines, there comes a time when ancient types become so exceedingly rare as to make conservation desirable. For several years Henry Ford has been assembling the oldest existing examples of seemingly almost everything under the sun at Dearborn, Mich., and South Sudbury, Mass. Just at this moment it appears that the covered bridges, which once were numerous in parts of the United States, are going out of existence. Steel and cement are forcing the old wooden structures into the background. Perhaps Mr. Ford or someone else might like to make a collection of the comparatively few remaining covered affairs and present them in perpetuity as The Museum of Covered Bridges.

Saying Good-by to the Telephone

WELL-KNOWN hero of the films at Holly-A wood had his telephone number changed because enthusiasts persisted in calling him at all hours just to hear the sound of his voice. Doubtless his responses were not always hero-like, but his protests proved as satisfying as hours of polite conversation, even with the charges reversed.

The average man will probably never experience the thrill of seeing his name emblazoned on a motion-picture screen, but if he is honest he will confess a sense of brotherhood to the Hollywood celebrity. What busy executive has not been riveted to the phone by some effusive acquaintance who finds difficulty in bringing his remarks to a complete stop? What master of the household, on a Sunday afternoon, has not been brusquely dispatched by any one of a dozen youthful pals to call Robert to the waiting receiver? What awakened man-or womanhas not been soothingly requested by an operator to "Excuse it, please!" when he has finally responded to a telephonic barrage with a meek "Hello!"?

The telephone is at once friend and tyrant. Now that vacation days have come, and the long road beckons, and the wind croons in the high branches, the typical city dweller will find surcease in the kindly oblivion of wood and stream, where there are no alarm clocks, no street cars, no milk wagons, no radios, and no jangling bells to call him back to a world reluctant to let him go. Small wonder the average human being feels like expressing just now a heartfelt "good-by" to the telephone, instead of the conventional greeting of "Hello! hello!" It is good, occasionally, to give one's ears a rest.

Another Brilliant Wimbledon

O WIN a championship title at Wimbledon has always been one of the greatest ambitions that a tennis player could have, for Wimbledon is the oldest and most famous of all the tennis championships. There was a time when the Wimbledon winners were recognized as the world champions, and while they may not now be officially regarded as such, they generally deserve the title. With Henri Cochet of France, winning the men's singles; Miss Helen N. Wills, United States, the women's singles: Miss Wills and Francis T. Hunter, United States, the mixed doubles; Mrs. M. Holcroft Watson and Mrs. Leo Mitchell, England, the women's doubles, and John W. Van Ryn and Wilmer L. Allison, United States, the men's doubles, it would indeed be difficult to name players more worthy of world championship honors. Moreover, when one considers that the United States took three of the titles, France one and England the international flavor. By winning the women's championship for the third successive year, Miss Wills stamped herself as in the very foremost rank of women players, and she is entitled to be ranked as equal with, if not superior to, Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen of France. For generalship and power and accuracy of stroking, she far outclassed her field, and when it is recalled that she also holds the championships of France and the United States. the title of world champion belongs to her without question.

the other, there can be no question regarding

This year's Wimbledon tournament has also probably marked the passing from European championship play of William T. Tilden 2d of the United States. Ever since he won his first United States singles championship in 1920, Tilden has ranked as one of the best and most colorful players the sport has ever produced. He has announced his decision to retire from international competition.

Editorial Notes

Those followers of athletics in the United States who have noted the remarkable improvement that has taken place each year in the Japanese college baseball teams which have visited America can well understand what Arne Borg, the famous Swedish swimmer, means when he says that Japan will, within five years, set the pace for the world in swimming and track and field athletics. That country won its first Olympic contest last year, and will probably win more when the games are held at Los Angeles in 1932.

What would seem to be a really remarkable forward step in the revision of the Encyclopedia Britannica, now nearing completion, is the fact that one of the three final readers to pass on corrected proofs is a high-school boy. If, after careful perusal, he is unable to comprehend an article, the author of the article must clarify it so that the boy is able to understand it. Such a method is bound to extend the usefulness of this great work of knowledge.

President Hoover, naming the editor of an agricultural paper for the Federal Farm Board, knows perhaps that country editors in the past had a first-hand acquaintance with farm products. They got many of their subscriptions that way and had to know values.

The Mountain of Bright Stones

snow fields and across icy slopes until, at last, a gay, hungry crowd, we come hand over hand up the final stretch of ropework to stand on the rugged top of Pinnacle peak in the Tatoosh range. To the south, hundreds of miles away, appear three snow-topped peaks of the Cascades-Hood, Adams, and St. Helens-ghost mountains of a Japanese print in their distant mists. And to the north, close, so breathlessly close, is Rainier, the mighty monarch of them all.

Glorious in height it stretches upward into the friendly blue skies for nearly 15,000 feet. Like the arms of a gigantic starfish, glaciers cut their sparkling way down its sides. The middle slopes are darkened by patches of alpine firs and hemlocks, and garlanded with flowers tinted as a rainbow on a holiday. Innumerable lakes have chosen this setting for the beauty of their turquoise depths.

This Pinnacle peak trip is a kind of seasoner for the more strenuous climb up Rainier; and Heine, the head guide, is with us to see that the seasoning is properly done. A very tower of strength and patience is this tall, raw-boned Swiss, but it is for his enlivening conversation that I value him most. All morning I have stretched my legs to match his long stride and listened to his tales of years spent with his father and brothers as guide in the Swiss Alps before he came to America.

"Why do the glaciers move?" I asked.
"For the same reason that I moved down the mountain when I carried the fat man I told you about." Heine grinned. "The weight."

"Did you know that a glacier is a whole lot like a river?" he inquired after a bit. When I shook my head he went on. "Yes, sir, it is. The current moves faster in the center than at the edges, and the cascades and ripples are there, frozen into place." I remembered the delightful hours spent the afternoon before in the beautiful caverns of Paradise glacier, which form every season with the melting ice. Some of them extend 200 feet under the ice. and no legendary deep-sea palace was ever more fanciful or exquisite than these grottos. Their daintily fluted walls, ranging in color from the most delicate green to deepest. ultramarine, reflect the sun in countless flashing gleams.

Heine had distributed the contents of his ruesack, and we were all comfortably seated with sandwiches and hot chocolate, when he turned his lively discourse upon the mountain ranges about Rainier. Aside from the Tatoosh range, there is Little Tahoma to the east, surrounded by a wilderness of forest which is the year-round residence of bear, deer, cougar and mountain goat. To the north rise the peaks of the Sluiskin range, Chief Sluiskin, Sluiskin's Squaw and the Three Papooses, named for the Indian who guided the first successful climbing party on Mt.

Another Indian, Ochogach, is supposed to have drawn the map which gave English geographers their first knowledge of the existence of the snow-crowned peak. But it was not until Capt. George Vancouver made his trip of exploration along the northwest coast in 1768 that the mountain is known to have been seen by a white man. Lewis and Clark record seeing the mountain in 1806 from the south bank of the Columbia River, near where the city of Portland now stands.

ALL morning we have toiled over endless miles of Eventually the hour arrives when Heine must move snow fields and across icy slopes until, at last, a his reluctant charges down the the top, but when Heine mysteriously promises a new thrill on the way down we are finally persuaded to start. After a time on the rocky trail we come to the first gentle slope of snow and there we learn to "glissade. There is absolutely no technique required for glissading. One just sits down on the snow, gives a gentle push with the alpenstock, and immediately becomes one's own toboggan, accompanying the flight with shrieks of laughter.

Some minutes of this sport and the whole party is glad to note the pink of the minutus which heralds the news of a cold drink, for this amusingly saucy little flower chooses only the banks of cold springs for its home.

When Mt. Rainier was an active volcano it was known to the Indians as the "mountain of bright stones," and it is a charming fancy to think that all these stones may bave turned into the lovely flowers which hardly wait for the snow to melt before they poke their bright heads out to look around. The geologist at least gives us the basis for this idea when he admits that the volcanic ash content of the soil is largely responsible for their luxuriance.

Most of these venturesome plants flower in the open alpine meadows just below the permanent snow line, where the ground is positively powdered with blossoms. The exquisite avalanche fily is perhaps the most brave and generous in its blooming, for it is the most plentiful of all the flowers and comes early and stays late so that all may enjoy it. It grows close to the edges of melting snow banks, and often dares to push its green leaves and creamy petals right up through the snow, as if to say:

"Ho-who cares for the cold-not I." The 500 varieties of alpine flowers may crowd the stage of the summer scene, but the trees are a year-round delight because of their size and unusual arrangement. When one sees these alpine firs and hemlocks standing in graceful groups on the hillsides and meadows it always seems that they are about to practice some stately dance. In the center is a tall old leader who may well know the intricate steps they are about to execute. And when the wind is tuned to just the right pitch they wave their branches in swaying rhythm, as though waiting for the signal to begin.

In January, when the Rainier country is magically wrapped in ermine, the tinkle of sleighbells mingles with the shouts of those on the long toboggan slide. The heavy snowfall and moderate temperature make it ideal for sleighing, sliding, skiing, and snowshoeing. A team of Samoyes with their Eskimo driver may be royally commanded for a run through the woods.

Longmire is the winter headquarters from which one travels up to Paradise valley on snowshoes to find the gabled roof of the inn just showing above 100 feet of snow. Then the glowing days spent in its friendly shelter or upon the flowering alpine slopes of last summer seem an impossible fairy tale. But one look at the mountain, towering upward in steadfast peace is quite reassuring enough to fill a brand new bag of fancies about next

From the World's Great Capitals-Berlin

BERLIN DEFORE the war Berlin was universally considered the cleanest city in Europe, if not the world, and even now-though perhaps not quite up to its old standing in this respect—it is always admired by foreign visitors for its clean thoroughfares and generally trim appearance. The Berlin authorities, however, are not satisfied: perfection is their aim. All streets are washed once a day, and the chief thoroughfares during the night as well. Also wastebaskets are stationed in many inconspicuous corners for the reception of paper and other refuse, and they have also been put in on trial in some autobuses. A law exists forbidding the casting away of any such extraneous matter upon the sideway, but some offend against it, nevertheless. The indefatigable munici pality has now instituted a "Street Cleanliness Week" which is confidently expected, by means of admonitory posters, gay processions of water carts and other street-cleaning paraphernalia, to awaken the slumbering conscience of the man in the street and make him tidy.

The course of the election in England was followed with keen attention here, and the success of the Labor Party is generally held to be the reverse of a calamity Many of the residents in Berlin are recalling the visit a number of leading representatives of this city a short time before the outbreak of the war. when they were everywhere fêted and their views on peace were widely appreciated. Mr. MacDonald spoke in Reichstag on the occasion of a luncheon given by the Government; Mr. Henderson preached in the American Church, and Mr. Clynes made a memorable speech in the cause of peace between the two nations at the final banquet a few hours before the English visitors left. Most of the members were accompanied by their wives. and the week passed pleasantly and quickly. The many social welfare and educational institutions, industrial concerns and other organizations were shown and apprewhile a special performance at the opera several garden parties completed the program of enter-

What is often called the North-German Venice, the Spreewald or Spree Forest, a district some sixty miles out of Berlin, has had an utterly unexpected windfall. An inhabitant of Vetschau, one of the largest villages, emigrated to America many years ago and has bequeathed to his birthplace a considerable fortune. Great rejoicings have just taken place, for all taxes and debts have been paid off, leaving enough for a three-days' festival of dancing and feasting, and something in the bank for unforeseen contingencies. Nobody will grudge the Spreewald its good fortune. This wooded district, intersected by a network of a hundred arms of the Spree, which are navigated by punts, is a favorite week-end resort of Berliners and foreigners. It is of Wendish origin and many of its inhabitants retain their customs and costumes, as well as their language, which is entirely unintelligible to their Berlin neighbors. Fishing and small farming form the occupation of both men and women of this picturesque district, which is about thirty miles long and from two to five miles broad. 1 1 1

There is a distinct increase in the number of private owners of airplanes in Germany. This is computed at present to be something over 300, the number having been considerably augmented since the recent aero exhibition. This is quite a good percentage of the 800 airplanes permitted to Germany at the present moment. The machines are mostly of the lighter type, Junkers, Dietrich, Raab-Katzenstein, Daimler, Focke-Wulf, and Albatross being the most popular. These privately owned planes belong chiefly to industrialists, estate-owners, sportsmen and newspaper men, but one circus director possesses no fewer than seven. A few German women are now enthusiastic fliers, Thea Rasche leading the way. Junkers' newly constructed two-seater, the metal sports plane, A-50, is anticipated with much interest. It has passed its factory flying tests satisfactorily, and will participate in the European circular competition for light planes in August, after which it will be built in sequence for the public

. . . The glorjous Whitsun weather caused record traffic to all parts of the country, the Reichs railway alone sending 250 extra trains to the Harz Mountains, the Baltic and other comparatively near-by beauty spots. As to Potsdam -now perfumed by lilac from end to end-and other delightful places on the Havel lakes and the Spree, they I were besieged by happy crowds all day Sunday and Monday and yet there was room for all. The local rail-way conveyed on the "first holiday," despite its coolness, 1,000,000 persons, and on Whit Monday, 2,500,000. The awkward, but commodious electric trams, which take you any distance up to ten miles for twenty pfennigs, carried on Monday some 2,000,000 passengers (including innumerable straphangers) and the more agile motorbuses unfortunately far too few in number-conveyed some 600,000 to the neighboring woods and lakes where pic-nicking and bathing were the rule. Altogether, Whitsuntide proved a very welcome break in the strenuous work of the average Berliner.

William Dana Orcutt and Mrs. Eddy

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

The impression of Mrs. Eddy, gained from personal acquaintance, by United States Senator George H. Moses of New Hampshire, reported in The Christian Science Monitor recently, has reminded me of the similar impression, also gained through personal acquaintance, which has been recorded by William Dana Orcutt of Boston (author and authority on printing) in his book enfitled 'In Quest of the Perfect Book." Mr. Orcutt writes as fol-

One of my earliest and pleasantest responsibilities was to act as Mr. Wilson's representative in his business relations with Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, which required frequent trips to "Pleasant View" at Concord, New Hampshire. Mrs. Eddy always felt under deep obligation to Mr. Wilson for his interest in the manuscript of Science and Health when she first took it to him with a view to publication, and any message from him always received immediate and friendly consideration.

The characteristic about Mrs. Eddy that impressed me the first time I met her was her motherliness. She gave every one the impression of deepest interest and concern in what he said, and was sympathetic in everything that touched on his personal affairs. When I teld her of John Wilson's financial calamity, she seemed to regard it as a misfortune of her own. Before I left her that day she drew a check for a substantial sum and offered it to me.

her that day she drew a check for a substantial sum and offered it to me.

"Please hand that to my old friend," whe said, "and tell him to be of good cheer. What he has given of himself to others all these years will now return to him a thousand-fold."

At first one might have been deceived by her quiet manner into thinking that she was easily influenced. There was no suggestion to which she did not hold herself open. If she approved, she accepted it promptly: if it did not appeal, she dismissed it with a graciousness that left no mark; but it was always settled once and for all. There was no wavering and no uncertainty.

After Mrs. Eddy moved from Concord to Boston, her affairs were administered by her trustees, so I saw her less frequently. To many her name suggests a great religious movement, but when I think of her I seem to see acres of green grass, a placid little lake, a silver strip of river, and a boundary line of hills; and within the unpretentious house a slight, unassuming woman—very real, very human, very appealing, supremely content in the self-knowledge that, no matter what others might think, she was delivering her message to the world.

Ha, ha!

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Twice recently the writer has noted in your columns the familiar little pleasantry concerning the "laff" of the New Yorker, and the "larff" of the New Englander, and since the latter pronunciation, as indicated by the spelling, is scarcely accurate, albeit so widely accepted, she feels impelled to utter a protest,

The originator of this comparison perhaps looked up the sound of a in laugh, aunt, calf, half and similar words, and found that Webster (himself, of course, a New Englander) likens this sound to that of the a in arm, but he surely failed to discover that ah, father, etc., are also given as illustrations.

Now, this a in arm does not partake of the r (the letter that the New Englander softens almost to the point of elimination) in the slightest degree, but is sounded exactly like the same letter in ah, so that in attempting to spell the word in question according to the New England pronunciation the form "lahff" should obviously be given There are cultured people everywhere who give this Italian a correctly, but having lived in various widely separated sections of the United States, the writer does not hestitate to proclaim New England as the only place where the correct pronunciation is universally given Herself a native, she is bound to confess that "we" apt to extend this pronunciation to words which should not have it, such as ask, glass, basket, dance and others, where the a is given an intermediate sound denoted by one dot rather than two above the letter; but, on the other hand, these same words are almost universally mispronounced elsewhere, by giving them the short flat a as heard in the "laft" of not only the New Yorker, many, many others.
